Expected low voter

Panel talk on electoral reform, voting group's big announcement planned in shadow of Tuesday's municipal election.

SPENCER BUELL
@MetroBOS
spencer.buell@metro.us

They sat over cups of coffee early this summer and planned it out: a panel discussion on low-turnout elections, to be held two days after an election where turnout was especially bad.

The election? This one. The Tuesday, Nov. 3, 2015 municipal election, which was expected to attract some of the most dismal turnout in recent memory.

With universally grim predictions about this week's election — which would decide the makeup of Boston's city council as well as leadership in dozens of Massachusetts communities — professors Erin O'Brien of UMass Boston and Rachael Cobb of Suffolk University told Metro that if they were betting, they would bet this one would be bad.

"I'd put everything on red and spin," O'Brien said. "This municipal election in Boston is really the perfect storm. It's always bad if it's not a presidential year, or a Congressional year or a mayoral year."

Turnout in 2011 was 63,009. Commonwealth magazine predicted fewer than 50,000 would hit the polls on Tuesday.

So now seemed like a good time to get a group of experts together to talk about change, said Cobb and O'Brien, co-regional leaders of the Scholars Strategy Network, who assembled a talk Thursday night at 6:30 in Suffolk University's Modern Theatre whose roster features experts who study voter turnout.

On the menu of topics for the panel are possible solutions, for example, moving municipal elections so they happen at the same time as presidential ones, which are huge draws to polling stations, organizers said.

There are other factors at play, Cobb said. City elections aren't partisan, which means there aren't Republicans and Democrats squaring off for votes, Cobb said. Changing that might spur interest in races, she said.

Also, they said, the sheer number of elections in the state can be burdensome to voters suffering election "fatigue."

Plus, there isn't much excitement in this cycle, with the exception of a contested race between longtime Councilor Charles Yancey and Andrea Campbell, a newcomer, in District 4, which falls in Mattapan, Jamaica Plain, Dorchester and Roslindale.

Politicians, though, don't exactly have the incentive to look for changes, O'Brien said. After all, she said, the system as it is helped incumbents get elected.

So planning to be part of the news cycle after the inevitable low-voter turnout headlines makes sense as a way to shine light on the issue, the professors said.

The panel isn't the only event timed to happen after the election this week.

Another group, the Election Modernization Coalition, picked Thursday to announce recommendations on putting to action the state's early voting law, which passed in 2014 to cut down on lines at polling stations and, in theory, boost turnout by boosting convenience.

Pam Wilmot, executive director of coalition member group Common Cause Massachusetts, told Metro the timing wasn't necessarily part of a master plan, but said it could spur more media coverage.

"It's partially coincidence," Wilmot said. "But also I think people will have questions about the election as well."

So is it cynical to schedule an event in the shadow of a less-than-inspiring election before it even happens?

Cobb doesn't think so.

"[Electoral reform] is not an easy topic to elicit wild excitement over, whether or not a major election is going on. So the timing of it is because we're all thinking about it at this moment," Cobb said. "[Tuesday's election) is a policy window — a moment for us to say, 'There are some alternatives to this. This could be better.'"

Polls were scheduled to be open from 7 a.m. to 8 p.m. in Boston. Check the city's website to find polling stations in your precinct.

Cambridge cops seek would-be bank robber

Cambridge police are trying to identify a man who allegedly tried to rob a bank in Central Square on Oct. 27.

Police are looking for a man in his 50s who may have forgotten his mask, but had a black vest and khakis on. The suspect walked into the bank and said to a Leader Bank employee, "Don't be stupid. This is a robbery," according to police.

He is said to have mentioned a gun and had a crumpled piece of paper in his gloved hand, police said. The bank employee told police that the man got nervous when another employee came too close. He then bolted out of the bank without any money.

Police released his image on Monday. Anyone with information on the man in question should call 617-349-9303. METRO

Burlington mosque vandalized, police arrest two suspects

Burlington Police arrested two men and charged them with vandalizing a Mosque on Sunday morning.

The vandalized mosque and the suspects PROVIDED

Security footage reportedly showed two masked suspects emerge from a white car and vandalize the Islamic Center of Burlington on Lexington Street. Vandals spent roughly 20 minutes defacing the mosque, police said. The suspects spray-painted "USA" on the exterior of the building, and pelted it with eggs.

Cameron Cappella, 18, and Derrik Demone, 18, both from Burlington, were charged with malicious destruction of property over $250 and tagging property, police said.

Investigators said they acted on several tips, which led them to the suspects.

"We were able to quickly close this shameful case involving a hate crime in our community," Burlington Police Chief Michael Kent said Monday. "This behavior is not tolerated in town and the suspects will be held responsible for their actions."

Members of the Islamic Center were inside praying when they heard the noises from outside, police said. Security footage showed the two men running toward the mosque while a third person is seen sitting in the driver's seat of a white Crown Victoria, police said.

The Council on American Islamic Relations Massachusetts branch is asking the FBI to investigate this incident as a hate crime. METRO

Pentagon spends $43 million to build Afghanistan gas station: watchdog

The gas station in Sheberghan, Afghanistan opened in 2012 and was created to show that compressed natural gas could be used in Afghanistan in cars.

The Pentagon GETTY IMAGES

The U.S. Department of Defense spent nearly $43 million on a gas station in northern Afghanistan and has been unable to explain why it cost so much, a U.S. special inspector reported on Monday.

The Pentagon "charged the American taxpayers $43 million for what is likely to be the world's most expensive gas station," said John Sopko, head of the Special Inspector General for Afghanistan Reconstruction (SIGAR), a congressionally mandated body. The amount was spent between 2011 and 2014 on construction and initial implementation of the station.

The gas station in Sheberghan, Afghanistan opened in 2012 and was created to show that compressed natural gas could be used in Afghanistan in cars effectively.

However, the task force behind the project closed operations in March. For that reason, according to the report, the Department of Defense said it did not possess "the personnel expertise to address these questions."

"Frankly, I find it both shocking and incredible that [the Defense Department] asserts that it no longer has any knowledge," the report said. It added that the task force reported directly to the Office of the Secretary of Defense and was an $800 million program.

The report found that a compressed natural gas filling station in neighboring Pakistan costs no more than $500,000 to construct.

That would make the gas station in Afghanistan more than 140 times more expensive.

A Defense Department spokesman said the Pentagon continues to provide access to documents to SIGAR through a reading room.

"Further, we have offered to assist SIGAR in locating and contacting any former TFBSO [Task Force for Business and Stability Operations] personnel they wish to interview," said Army Lieutenant Colonel Joe Sowers.

Nearly $110 billion have been appropriated in Washington for reconstruction in Afghanistan since 2002, when U.S. forces drove the Taliban from power for harboring militants from al Qaeda, which carried out the Sept. 11, 2001, attacks. REUTERS

Flight recorders show crashed Russian plane not struck from outside

The Russian plane that crashed in Egypt was not struck from the outside and the pilot did not make a distress call before it disappeared from radar, a source in the committee analyzing the flight recorders said on Monday.

The source declined to give more details, but based his comments on the preliminary examination of the black boxes recovered from the Airbus A321. The plane crashed in the Sinai Peninsula on Saturday, killing all 224 people on board.

The Egyptian government said the black boxes were being examined by Egyptian and Russian experts, along with German and French specialists from Airbus and from Ireland, where the aircraft was registered. It said the search was continuing across the crash site. Security sources said intelligence agencies had obtained a copy of the passenger list.

Russian officials have said the plane, carrying vacationers from the Red Sea resort of Sharm el-Sheikh to St. Petersburg, likely broke up in mid-air, but said it was too early to say what caused the crash.

The first bodies recovered from the wreckage arrived on board a Russian government plane at St. Petersburg's Pulkovo Airport, where grieving Russians left piles of flowers.

A Reuters photographer saw a white truck leaving the airport, escorted by police cars, heading for a St. Petersburg morgue, where the bodies were to be identified. Egypt said the plane was carrying 196 bodies. A second plane was due to leave Cairo on Monday evening.

Russian President Vladimir Putin, who had declared Sunday a day of mourning, said on Monday the crash was a great tragedy.

When asked if a terrorist attack could be to blame, Putin's spokesman Dmitry Peskov said no theory could yet be ruled out. REUTERS

"Without any doubt, everything should be done so that an objective picture of what happened is created."

Ohio voters weigh legalizing recreational marijuana use

Ohio voters will decide Tuesday on whether to become the first Midwestern state to legalize the recreational use of marijuana, though a rival ballot measure could kill the law before it takes effect.

Issue 3 would add an amendment to the state constitution legalizing both personal and medical use of marijuana for those over 21 years old.

The ballot initiative was the result of a campaign that gathered more than 300,000 valid voter signatures from around the state.

If it passes, Ohio would become the fifth and largest state to legalize the recreational usage of marijuana, following Alaska, Colorado, Washington and Oregon, as well as the District of Columbia.

Ohio is considered a political bellwether — the candidate who wins Ohio usually wins the presidency. So a win for recreational marijuana in Ohio is expected to change the national conversation on legalization, according to Gary Daniels of the Ohio American Civil Liberties Union.

Seven other states are expected to vote on recreational marijuana legalization next year, according to Danielle Keane, political director for NORML, which advocates for legalization.

But Issue 3 also grants exclusive rights for commercial marijuana growth and distribution to 10 facilities around the state. Those facilities are owned by investors in the legalization movement.

Critics of the measure say this creates a monopoly, and responded with a rival ballot measure called Issue 2. This ballot measure would nullify legalization if it creates "an economic monopoly or special privilege" for a private entity. REUTERS

Gwen Stefani and Blake Shelton were totally holding hands

ALL PHOTOS GETTY IMAGES

Freshly divorced "The Voice" judges Gwen Stefani and Blake Shelton continue to stoke rumors of interoffice romance, this time by spending some quality time together at Halloween bashes thrown by Jared Leto and George Clooney's tequila company. "Stefani stayed for about 40 minutes, then left the house holding Shelton's hand," a source tells "Entertainment Tonight." "Shelton and Stefani apparently let go of each other's grasp, however, when they noticed a photographer in sight." Smooth move, guys. Maybe we can read something into how Stefani dressed as a bloodied-up cowgirl — because of a new country music influence, perhaps? — while Shelton donned a poncho, a long beard and a trucker hat. I can only assume he was dressed up as … Blake Shelton.

Amy Schumer has the best love-life update

Amy Schumer is not just a successful comedian, actress and author. She's also an incredibly helpful information source, especially when it comes to her love life. While celebrating winning the Charlie Chaplin Brittania Award for Excellence in Comedy from BAFTA, Schumer was asked if she's currently seeing anyone, and she responded thusly: "No, my vagina remains vacant." So poetic, so straightforward. So … evocative. And how much would it take to get into said destination for a willing suitor? "At least $5."

Hurricane Adele is real, guys, and it's coming

How do you know when your new album is a big deal? When other superfamous artists are arranging their release schedules around you. That's apparently what's been happening around the Nov. 20 drop of Adele's latest, "25," at least according to one music biz insider. "The major labels have realized it's essential they get out any big releases before then because from Nov. 20 it's likely to be about one woman only," the anonymous source breathlessly tells MSN. "That's why Justin Bieber, Kylie Minogue and One Direction are going head-to-head the week before. Usually the record companies would want a No. 1 album with artists that big, but in this case they simply want to get the album out there before Adele." She's just trying to say hello, guys.

Taylor Swift weathering dumb lawsuit

It's possible Taylor Swift won't even notice, but she's being sued by R&B singer Jesse Braham for $42 million over claims that she ripped off lyrics from his 2013 track "Haters Gone Hate" for her hit "Shake It Off," according to New York's Daily News. But don't worry, it's not going to get very far. "Mr. Braham, who is representing himself, cannot claim copyright protection for the phrases 'haters gone hate' and 'players gone play,'" a legal expert tells Perez Hilton. "The Copyright Act does not protect short phrases, and these phrases are not original to him." Despite this, Braham — who is also thinking about suing CNN for naming their morning show "New Day" — is adamant that he's in the right. "At first I was going to let it go, but this song is my song all the way," he says. Oh man, wouldn't it be hilarious if, because of that quote, he got sued by the "Frozen" folks?

Seven minutes in heaven with The Fat Jew

We sit down with Instagram star The Fat Jew to talk about his debut book, favorite NYC strip clubs and more.

MATT LEE
matthew.lee@metro.us

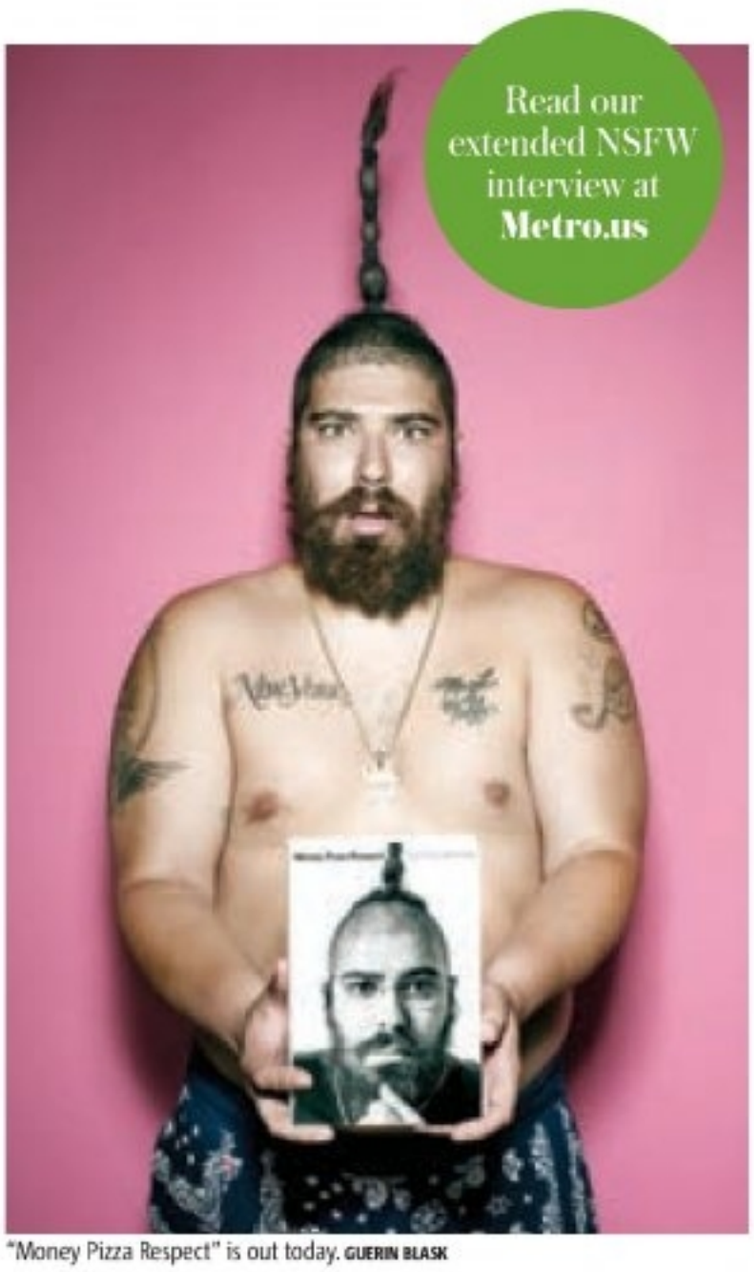
"I want to die in an arcade," Josh "The Fat Jew" Ostrovsky — who has over 6 million followers on Instagram — confesses while sitting in a nightmarish Chinatown video game arcade den with his left forearm plugged into an IV of what the nurse in attendance says is pure vitamin C.

His publicist claims it's to help fight a cold, but The Fat Jew says he's dying. I ask him if he's trying to be the center of a Lifetime movie: "The Fat Jew: Death in an Arcade."

"Totally! Who would play me?" His publicist suggests Diane Lane, and The Fat Jew's eyes widen with excitement. "Diane Lane!" he exclaims.

More pizza, more respect

The Fat Jew will probably have to put the Lifetime movie on the back burner, because he's currently thinking way more about his new book, "Money Pizza Respect" (out today).



"Money Pizza Respect" is out today. GUERIN BLASK

The book is a mixed bag of autobiographical stories, some Kanye West and Kim Kardashian erotica, and recipes for things like a Xanax smoothie. According to The Fat Jew, the book has shuttled him to the same level as James Joyce and John Steinbeck.

"Money Pizza Respect" is a wild ride punctuated with chapters The Fat Jew called "chill zones" because, according to him, "reading can sometimes be too much."

"It's a lot. You need to break it up. You gotta chill," The Fat Jew explains. "You read a bunch, and then you get rewarded by like coloring a picture of Tyrese [Gibson] or a recipe for a Xanax smoothie. I want to make this a party. You can't be too heavy."

Connecting emotionally with strippers

Asked what his real-life chill zones are, The Fat Jew chuckles. "I like to go to Rick's Cabaret, this strip club, in the middle of the day. They do a great Caesar [salad]. I can kick back and relax. It's not too high octane. The dancers aren't giving it their all. They're very much like, 'Uh, I'm on the day shift.' ... I don't even like lap dances. I would rather sit with a bunch of strippers and talk with them like, 'Are you still going to dental school?' I just love chatting with strippers about their hopes and dreams."

Aries If you manage your time carefully, a setback won't tax your progress. You will have a false impression of someone who could help you out.

Taurus Resolve a misunderstanding before agreeing to a partnership. Don't listen to rumors. It's essential that you realize what is expected of you.

Gemini Let others see your affectionate side. Your family may be feeling unappreciated if you haven't been sharing your thoughts or time.

Cancer A new relationship will be an eye opener. A change of scenery will be refreshing. Making vacation plans now will give you a strong incentive to save.

Leo Attention to detail will be necessary before you make a change in direction. Avoid taking on too many tasks at the same time.

Virgo Volunteer work will be satisfying and appreciated. Strangers will become friends and personal relationships will be strengthened if you share concerns.

Libra Your desire for residential updates will add to your stress if you are not prudent. Keep tabs on contractors and renovating or remodeling costs.

Scorpio Don't do anything until you have weighed the consequences. Reveal just enough information to entice without giving away your game plan.

Sagittarius Don't be limited by the perceptions of others. Look into unorthodox ways of marketing your skills and ideas. Joint ventures look promising.

MAKE HEALTHY YOUR NEW HAPPY

Instagram: @catmeffan

CATMEFFAN, INSTAGRAM

I am...
Cat Meffan, a U.K. health and fitness blogger and jewelry designer. As an ex-gymnast and dancer, I have found a new passion for yoga and all things bendy.

I am on Instagram because...
In the beginning, I used Instagram as a way of motivating myself to eat well, try new workouts, and as an excuse to buy new activewear. From that, it has evolved into what I hope is a page to inspire and motivate others through doing the things I love most.

Follow me for...
Fitness, yoga and health inspiration, with hopefully a few laughs along the way. I am very real with my followers, talking about times when I feel unmotivated, my injuries and some fitness fails! I like to chat about progress and how health and fitness is a journey that constantly changes along with our mind-sets.

My motto is...
"You can't rush something you want to last forever." After being the girl who tried every new fad diet and fitness craze out there, I realized there was so much more to it than that. For me, being fit and healthy is a lifestyle, and one that I enjoy every second of.

Instagram: @mynameisjessamyn

MYNAMEISJESSAMYN, INSTAGRAM

I am...
Jessamyn Stanley, a 28-year-old body-positive yoga teacher, writer and advocate. While I was in graduate school, I went to our local Bikram yoga studio and I was surprised to discover that yoga provided an unspeakable level of relief for me.

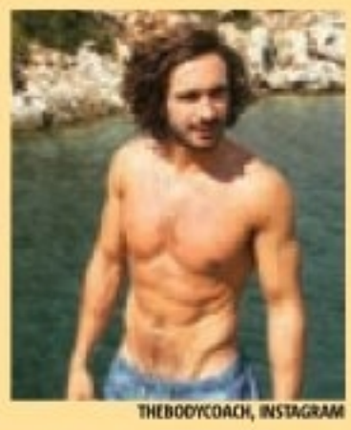
I am on Instagram because...
I began documenting my yoga practice on Instagram simply so I could track my alignment when practicing at home. It's also a great goal-setting mechanism – photographing my yoga practice anchored my home practice into a daily essential for my life.

Follow me for...
I'm not really concerned with gaining more followers — who knows if social media will even be a "thing" in two to three years? I'm concerned about fostering change; I want to see more fat-bodied people living comfortably in their own skin and completely shame-free.

My motto is...
"Esse quam videri" — it means "to be, rather than to seem." In addition to being my home state of North Carolina's state motto, it's also a reminder to remain authentic.

My fave Instagram post is...
A few moments from my home practice when I found balance [on my head] without expecting it. This encapsulates the reason I will never stop practicing yoga – because no matter what, even when I doubt myself, I always have the capacity to exceed my wildest expectations.

Instagram: @TheBodyCoach



THEBODYCOACH, INSTAGRAM

I am...
That curly-haired guy shouting about midget trees [broccoli].

I am on Instagram because...
It's just a great platform to share ideas. I wanted to create a space that made it easy for people to be healthy, to eat right and to realize the body they want is achievable. I started using the hashtag #Leanin15 on Instagram to post 15-second videos showing how to make healthy meals in just 15 minutes to make just over a year ago, and the response has blown me away!

Follow me for...
Fun advice that puts some creativity and pleasure back into your diet and fitness plan. I get a lot of people asking me why they aren't losing weight, and I think it is really sad that we have been conditioned to under-eat, especially when trying shape up. That's something I want to educate people about — you can't train hard without the right fuel inside you.

My motto is...
"Prep like a boss!" If you are really serious about getting lean, preparation is key. You've got to set aside time to plan and prep the food you'll eat over the next few days.

Instagram: @amandabisk

AMANDABISK, INSTAGRAM

I am...
A former Australian elite pole-vaulter from Perth, Western Australia. I spent most of my life as a professional sports person until 2011 when I was diagnosed with chronic fatigue syndrome.

I am on Instagram because...
I wanted to document my journey [dealing with] chronic fatigue. It was a space where I could share what I was learning and what really helped me through recovery. I want it to be a positive and motivating place for people to come and feel inspired to live their healthiest and happiest life.

Follow me for...
My posts can help people on their own fitness journey. Whether that is a workout, fitness tip, recipe or something that inspires them to get active, or enjoy a smile at some of the pics. But meeting people and answering questions on my Instagram is what I love the most!

My motto is...
"Every day is your chance to do something great for yourself and those around you. Happiness and positivity spreads like wildfire! All it takes is for you to light the spark."

Instagram: @lottiemurphy_

LOTTIEMURPHY_, INSTAGRAM

I am...
A pilates instructor, health coach and lifestyle blogger from London. I am passionate about inspiring individuals to fall in love with taking care of their body, mind and soul.

I am on Instagram because...
I love taking photos and connecting with like-minded people.

Follow me for...
I feel that I am relatable because I don't always eat clean and sometimes I have down days and I express that through my Instagram account. I feel that I have a very positive outlook on life, in general. Lots of people have said to me that my account makes them feel happy, which is all I want.

My motto is...
"Be a nice human."

My fav Instagram post is...
There's a picture of me doing yoga. I love this one because of the caption that says, "Your dreams are inside of you because you are meant to achieve them." It makes me believe that anything is possible.

NBA power rankings | by James Toscano

No. 1

Warriors (3-0)

OK, so there appears to be no Finals hangover for Stephen Curry. The Warriors superstar shooter looks like he's just throwing a ball into the ocean so far. He's averaging a staggering 39.3 points per game through three games, including a 53-point performance on Halloween.

No. 2

Spurs (2-1)

Spurs are gonna Spur. It really doesn't matter what their regular season record is. If they're healthy going into the playoffs, they're the most dangerous team. Adding LaMarcus Aldridge and David West to a proven lineup makes this the team to beat alongside Golden State.

No. 3

Cavaliers (2-1)

As long as LeBron James is healthy for the Cavaliers, this team is going to be in it until the end. It's that simple. That's why Kevin Love chose to re-sign, right? They have an easy week, facing the 76ers twice and the Knicks once.

No. 4

Clippers (3-0)

There's no questioning the Clippers are one of the deepest teams in the NBA this season. DeAndre Jordan returned and they added Paul Pierce, Lance Stephenson and Josh Smith. Doc Rivers is going to have his hands full with the personalities in that locker room, but he's the man for the job.

No. 5

Thunder (3-0)

So much focus has been on whether or not Kevin Durant will leave Oklahoma City at the end of the season. Hopefully that doesn't take away from what looks to be a good season for Russell Westbrook and the (finally-healthy) Thunder.

No. 6

Raptors (3-0)

"We the North" is the Toronto Raptors' slogan, and they're starting the year north in the standings. Signing DeMarre Carroll was huge. But the word is Amir Johnson was the heart and soul of that squad. With him in Boston, it'll be interesting to see how the Raptors handle adversity.

No. 7

Grizzlies (2-1)

A 30-point blowout loss at home against the Cavaliers is no way to start the season — and extremely uncharacteristic of a team that's been a tough matchup over the last few seasons. They're in the midst of a long road trip against West Coast teams.

No. 8

Bulls (3-1)

The Bulls have the talent. They always have. But the question is whether or not they can stay healthy this season. Between Derrick Rose, Joakim Noah and Pau Gasol, that won't be an easy thing to do. New head coach Fred Hoiberg is going to need a lot out of Jimmy Butler.

No. 9

Wizards (2-1)

Kevin Durant or not, the Wizards are set up for a nice future behind the guard play of John Wall and Bradley Beal. That said, there's no excuse to lose to the Knicks at home. It gets a lot harder with the Spurs coming into town next.

No. 10

Rockets (0-3)

OK, what's going on with the Rockets? They've lost three games —all by 20 points. The first two came at home and the latest one against the Heat after they led by 21 points in the second half. That's a 41-point second-half turnaround — almost impossible to do.

No.17

Celtics (1-2)

Brad Stevens has about 10 reliable bench players. The problem is he doesn't have any great starters . . . yet. The hope is that Marcus Smart takes a big second-year leap. We'll see. The C's are at the Pacers Wednesday.
